Once upon no time,
there was a parrot.
He dreamed of travelling all over the world.
He was called Jojo.
Jojo had a cute look.
There was a spark in his eyes.

He excelled in beauty with his velvet feather playing with all the colours of the rainbow. His lime-colour belly also made him exceptional.

Jojo lived in the small town of Galanta and attended a nursery in the small village of Matúškovo.

Every day, after coming to the nursery, he first said goodbye to his mom. He kissed her and quickly ran to his favourite desk.

Crayons and paper were waiting for him, and he drew the map of the world with them — well, in the way he imagined it.

Jojo pecked the sides of the sheet of paper to make it look like an old map.

He marked the places he would like to visit with a cross.

Jojo didn't have many friends.

He was a quiet, contemplating bird.

His overly rich imagination could take him to the world's interesting places.

However, his classmates kept telling him, "You are so stupid! — Only birds with brains can travel! And you don't even have the brains!"

Jojo was sad.

He would even shed some tears.

But he never complained about his classmates mocking him.

Once, he asked his mommy if he had what it takes to travel around the world.

Mommy shook her head.

But she finally told him: "You don't have what it takes for the whole world, but you're fit for Europe!"
